

What is the status of your state's Recovery website?

- 15% 1. It is a robust source of current data for our citizens.
- 61% 2. Up and running, but there is more to be done.
- 13% 3. Not quite there yet – the site is still under development.
- 11% 4. We haven't recovered yet.

How difficult will it be for states to track and report on Recovery spending?

- | | |
|-----|---|
| 0% | 1. A piece of cake! |
| 15% | 2. Funds to the states will be easy, but the local/sub-recipient dollars are the challenge. |
| 27% | 3. Difficult – Funding limits investments in tracking and reporting solutions. |
| 16% | 4. Difficult – Lack of Federal information on grants is the problem. |
| 33% | 5. Very difficult, but we have to do it and do it well. |
| 9% | 6. Mission impossible. |

Use your Magic 8 Ball: By the end of this year, will the public have better information on the Recovery Act grants than other grants states received from the federal government?

11%

1. Absolutely, it's required by the law.

41%

2. Most probably, we'll have more complete information on funding and activities at all levels.

40%

3. Somewhat, there will be better information on grants to states but not to local/sub-recipients.

4%

4. No significant difference.

4%

5. No, too difficult to execute.

For State Members Only – Based on your experience with state information on federal grants and contracts, how much more are states having to spend on Recovery Act tracking?

3%

1. Significantly greater costs, but covered by federal Recovery Act funding

91%

2. Significantly greater costs not covered by Recovery Act funding

6%

3. The same costs

0%

4. Less costly